No - capital punishment has never been a deterrent. Take a look at the chart below. Murder rates have been HIGHER in death penalty states in EACH of the years from 1990 - 2007.

There are many different opinions as to why this is the case. It is probably due, at least in part, to the high cost (because of the legal process designed to minimize wrongful executions, it costs taxpayers MUCH more to execute someone than to imprison them for life) - every extra dollar spent on capital punishment is one that's NOT going to police departments, drug treatment programs, education, and other government services that help prevent crime.
